In the case listed above, the court ordered the defendant to pay restitution to you while he or she was on Probation.

The defendant's Probation ended on (date): _____. The defendant has not paid the full amount of restitution owed to you as ordered by the court during his or her probation.

The defendant still owes you $ _____ in restitution, and because the defendant's probation has ended, Adult Probation Services is no longer collecting payments from the defendant toward this amount.

Under section 53a-28a of the Connecticut General Statutes, you have the right to ask the civil court to enforce the rest of this restitution order in the same manner as a judgment in a civil case. There is no fee to file an action in civil court to enforce a restitution order.

If you would like to file a civil action to enforce the rest of this restitution order, you the court will need a copy of the criminal court's Order of Probation requiring the defendant to pay restitution or the criminal court's Order of Restitution for this case, and an affidavit from Adult Probation Services that tells the court what the terms of the restitution order were, the way that the defendant was required to pay that restitution, the amount that the defendant has paid toward that order, and the balance that is left to be paid.

If you have any questions about the defendant's probation, or if you would like to ask for a copy of the Order of Probation or the Order of Restitution in this case and the affidavit about the defendant's restitution, please contact the Probation Officer named below.

If you have any questions about, or need help with, filing the civil action to enforce the rest of the restitution order, you can also contact the:

Office of the Victim Advocate at 1-888-771-3126 or ova.info@ct.gov; or Office of Victim Services at 1-800-822-8428 or OVS@jud.ct.gov.
